An Eagle's Flight

I am going to take you on a trip across the continent of North America. Let us begin in the north. In Canada we see snow and ice to the far north. Forests cover much of the land. In the west the great Rocky Mountains span south, deep into the United States.

Now we fly south to Mexico. The tropical forests in Mexico are much different than the forests in Canada. The land of Central America is even more lush than Mexico.

As we fly north to the eastern coast of the U.S., we see coastal plains, forests and the ancient, rolling Appalachian Mountains. Turning west we glide over the great plains, which stretch out as far as the eye can see. Finally we reach the Rockies once more and come to rest on a craggy peak.
